morning catch.

DAY 6

Visit Slea Head and the Blasket Interpretive Center. The Wild Atlantic Way to Ballydavid Pier

This morning, you set out toward Slea Head, where small farms cling to the steep slopes along the stunning Dingle Way. Your coastal walk begins between emerald-green farmland and the deep-blue Atlantic, revealing remnants of Iron Age life—most notably, the beehive huts once used by Eremite monks and early farmers. As you round the headland, you're rewarded with breathtaking views of the Blasket Islands, once the westernmost inhabited lands in Europe. By 1953, the population had dwindled to just 22, and with no access to emergency services, the remaining residents relocated to the mainland.

Your walk continues along grassy paths that wind through sheep-dotted pastures, past curious donkeys, over stiles, and along ancient stone walls. Each hill climbed offers expansive views of the dramatic Irish landscape.

Afterward, visit The Blasket Center, a fascinating cultural and heritage museum that brings the story of traditional island life vividly to life. Through exhibitions, interactive displays, artifacts, and audio-visual presentations, the center chronicles the resilience and hardship of the island's former residents. During your visit, enjoy lunch on your own at the center's Bialann Café, where floor-to-ceiling windows frame panoramic views of the sea and islands.

Following lunch, you'll travel north along the Wild Atlantic Way, tracing more spectacular coastline on foot. Your afternoon walk delivers you to Ballydavid, where you can explore the pier and perhaps enjoy a pint overlooking Smerwick Harbor. On your return to Dingle, you'll stop to visit the medieval ruins of Kilmalkedar, a National Monument of Ireland. This remarkable site preserves one of the most significant early Christian settlements in the country, influential in the evolution of the Irish Church from the 6th to the 12th centuries.
